

Raising Compassionate Kids

Nurturing Core Building Blocks
for Compassion

Presented by Thaen Saelee, Psy.D.

“Developing compassion begins with understanding, and for young children, understanding emerges in conversation.”

Shauna Tominey, Ph.D.,
author of Creating Compassionate Kids

Children can begin to learn ways of observing social behaviors very early in life. By age 2, kids can mimic what other kids and adults do and say, as well as how they say it. This means that we can start to teach compassion and caring to young children when they are just toddlers.

This workshop will provide ways that parents, foster parents, kinship care providers, and other adults can nurture compassion in young children. Compassion motivates people to help others who may be in physical or emotional pain. Come join us in learning the difference between sympathy and compassion and concrete ways to promote caring behaviors.
