Join us for this special training on FASD, and learn more about its broad range of effects and lifelong implications on children and youth.

We will discuss the current research, the importance of correct diagnosis and support, and concrete, helpful ideas for parents, family service professionals, educators, and caregivers of children with FASD.

In this training, participants will learn:

- Causes and effects of FASD
- Typical strengths and characteristics of an individual with FASD
- Ideas to support and accommodate the various characteristics of individuals with FASD based on current research
- Importance of ongoing self-care and support with others in similar situations (to avoid burnout and isolation)

Eric Osborn, M.Div.

Eric Osborn has a Master of Divinity degree and has extensive experience in teaching and parenting children with special needs. He is a trained Empowered to Connect (Connected Parenting/TBRI) Parent Trainer and has been teaching in private schools for more than twenty-five years. Eric and his wife Amy have adopted four wonderful special needs children who deal with a variety of issues; FASD, attachment disorders, sensory processing disorders (SPD), learning handicaps, and autism. They have co-authored the book, In the Midst of... a guide for encouraging parents of special needs children. Their passion is helping others help children living with neurodevelopmental trauma and FASD.
